

Division of Humanities

Assistant Professor of World Literature

Bloomfield College Division of Humanities invites applications for a tenure-track position at the rank of assistant professor in World Literature. Candidates should have an earned PhD in World Literature or Post-Colonial Literature; candidates who are ABD in those fields at the time of application will also be considered. The ability to teach African American Literature will be considered a plus. Teaching excellence is the first priority at Bloomfield College, and the English discipline participates in the General Education program and leads the College in writing-across-the-curriculum efforts.

Applicants should submit a letter of application, curriculum vitae, three letters of recommendation, and official graduate and undergraduate transcripts to worldliterature@bloomfield.edu. Applications will be accepted by electronic submission only. Official transcripts may be submitted by mail to the Division of Humanities, c/o Paula Craig, 467 Franklin Street, Bloomfield, NJ 07003. Applications and all supporting materials are due by November 30, 2012. Screening interviews will be conducted at the MLA Convention in January 2013 and the position will start in September 2013. Bloomfield College is an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.
